Oriented to the south, this house rests on a combination of random-coursed granite and concrete foundations. Brown-painted, simulated log siding clads the exterior walls. Windows are generally paired, single-light casement, with brown wood and aluminum frames and brown-painted wood surrounds. A canted bow window, consisting of a single-light fixed frame, flanked by single-light casements, dominates the south elevation of a side-gabled addition to the east elevation. West of it is a nearly floor-to-ceiling, single-light fixed-frame window. The principal doorway opens in the south end of the east elevation. It hosts paired, plate-glass doors. The doorway provides access to an unsheltered wood deck filling the southeast-facing inside corner. Another doorway opens in the south end of the east wing's east elevation. North of it is a 4-beside-4-light, sliding-sash window, with an aluminum frame. Brown sheets of aluminum cover the front-gabled main roof and all other roof surfaces.

23. Landscape or special setting features:
This property is located in mountainous terrain sloping downward from north to south, at an elevation of around 8,600 feet above mean sea level. Houses are irregularly spaced along Eldorado Avenue, the main east-west thoroughfare through the village of Eldora. This cabin is located on the north side of the street and has a moderate setback. Rather dense stands of aspens and spruces cover much of the property, particularly the area west of the house. A woven-wire fence surrounds much of the property.
24. Associated building, features or objects:
GUEST CABIN
A guest cabin is located north of the house. Oriented to the south, the building appears to rest on concrete pylons. Brown-painted, vertical board-and-batten siding clads the exterior walls. Windows are generally 1-over-1-light, double-hung sash, with green-painted wood frames and red-painted wood surrounds. A large, single-light window opens in the south end of the east elevation. In the opposite end of the same elevation is a glass door or floor-to-ceiling window. The principal doorway opens in the center of the south elevation. It hosts a single-light, green-painted, four-panel wood door, sheltered beneath a front-gabled hood. Brown asphalt shingles cover the side-gabled main roof and all other roof surfaces. The rafter ends are exposed.

29. Construction history:

According to Boulder County Assessor records, this cabin was constructed in 1950. An analysis of the style, materials, and historical records corroborates this date. The original portion of this building was a single-story, L-plan building, with the inside corner facing southeast. However, this building has had numerous additions, including the construction of an additional half story. As well, many of the original windows have been replaced. These modifications occurred after 1967.

35. Historical background:

This cabin was constructed in 1950 as part of the Penrose Lodge complex to the east (1001 Eldorado Avenue, 5BL10486) and either served as additional bedrooms or may have been living quarters for the lodge's owner, Elizabeth E. Penrose. She was born in Ohio in August 1896. By 1900 her family relocated to Burlington, Iowa, where her father, James R. Penrose, was a prominent real estate and investment broker. Elizabeth Penrose earned a degree in nutrition and diet and eventually became a dietitian and professor of home economics at Rockford College, in Rockford, Illinois. She later returned to Burlington where she continued to teach. Elizabeth Penrose never married.

This history of Elizabeth Penrose's enterprise in Eldora begins at Rockford College, where she joined the faculty for the 1922-23 school year. It was there that she met and befriended another first-year instructor, Elizabeth Rearick, who was a physical education teacher. At the end of the school year, the pair decided to seek a summer vacation destination where they could also make some additional income. A mutual friend suggested Colorado, in particular "what she described as the 'most beautiful valley in the Rocky Mountains,'" remembers Rearick. "It had formerly been a mining camp-'Happy Valley Placer Mining,' but now was known as the village of Eldora."

Thus, Penrose and Rearick arrived in Eldora for the summer of 1923, renting the Rouse Cabin, at 399 Eldorado Avenue B. The following year, in 1924, they rented the Woodland Park Lodge and, before the close of that school term, advertised to their students that they would operate a summer camp in Eldora. For $22.50 a week, students would get sleeping accommodations, home-cooked meals (planned and prepared by Penrose), and guided hikes (led by Rearick). For an additional fee, students could take automobile trips to Estes Park, Central City, and other mountain destinations.

"The two of us really had a challenge," Rearick later wrote. "We had to get out there and explore-learn the names of the mountains, streams, lakes, flowers, birds, etc. By the first of June we were ready for our first campers. I am happy to report that the first summer we accommodated from six to twelve people through the three months we were open."

Rearick continued to operate the lodge with Penrose for another two summers. But when the physical education instructor decided to spend her summers furthering her education, Penrose continued to expand her Eldora business. She purchased the property outright in 1931 and changed the name to "Penrose Lodge." Penny Penrose improved the lodge building by modernizing the kitchen and adding bedrooms. In 1935, she constructed "Overflowin'."

While Penrose promoted her lodge with limited advertising in the midwest, including simple brochures, it was really word-of-mouth praise from repeat visitors that increased her business. And she carved out a particular marketing niche that reflected her own place in society. Penrose Lodge was largely a summer vacation destination for single, professional women in the Midwest. Indeed, for much of its history men were restricted implicitly from staying at the lodge. Penrose's guests, who usually stayed a week or two but could remain as long as a month, included college professors, executives, and even an opera star.

Penrose generally managed the lodge operations herself. However, she eventually hired a full-time cook and employed a young man each year to pump water, clean the rooms, wash dishes, and perform other odd jobs. She continued to run the lodge after World War II and apparently into the late 1950s. She later managed Blanchard's Inn (later known as Blanchard's Red Lion Inn) in Boulder Canyon for a few years. She then sold her Eldora properties and entered semiretirement, selling real estate and insurance in Boulder. "Many of the people in Eldora who were around during the years Penny operated Penrose Lodge also remember it with the same fond memories I have," Evans writes. "It was one of the nicest things about Eldora."

Purchasing the lodge building and adjacent lots from Elizabeth Penrose in 1967 were Frank J. and Kathryn P. Yeager. They later divided the Penrose Lodge property into separate parcels. In 1981, the Yeagers sold this cabin and associated lots to Barbara S. Jackson and Philip J. Grimm. David M. Nelson and Michael A. Miller purchased the property from Jackson and Grimm in 1984. Commonwealth Mortgage acquired the cabin and lots from Nelson and Miller in 1987, transferring it later that year to the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). In 1988, John D. and Claudia H. Putnam purchased the property from HUD, selling it a decade later to Jeffrey B. and Claire E. Haggin. They remain the current owners.

39. Areas of significance: Architecture
Social History

40. Period(s) of Significance: Architecture, 1950; Social History, 1950-1958

41. Level of Significance: National State Local

42. Statement of Significance:

This property is significant for its association with the development of Eldora as a summer tourist retreat, particularly as a component of the Penrose Lodge. The building is also architecturally significant as an example of the Rustic style. Character-defining features include the native stone foundation and simulated log siding. However, because of the principal building's low level of physical integrity, this property should not be considered individually eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places, the Colorado State Register of Historic Properties, or as a Boulder County Landmark.

43. Assessment of historic physical integrity related to significance:

Constructed in 1950, this cabin exhibits a low level of physical integrity relative to the seven aspects of integrity as defined by the National Park Service and the Colorado Historical Society: location, setting, design, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association. Additions and modifications have substantially altered the original form, greatly expanding what had been originally a very small, modest cabin. This building does not retain sufficient physical integrity to convey its architectural and historical significance.
